

Granpa's Great Escape

The battle of World War Two had began, Spitfires zoomed over the terrified village dropping powergull bombs! Suddenly, Granpa and Jack came to the rescue cautiously hovering above the men fighting for their country and beloved families. Ring! Ring! Ring! Ring! The phone puzzled Jack waking him up. He realised that he wasn't in a plane and it was just a dream, he usually dreamt that he was flying a plane with his Granpa.

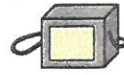

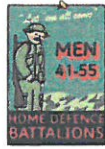

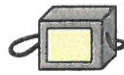

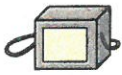

"Who could this be? It's 1 o'clock in the morning no one ever rings at this hour!" Jack questioned.

"No I'm certain he's definitely not here," Mum replied within a few seconds to the person on the other side of the phone, probably dad.

"What on earth has happened, please tell me mum!" Jack asked in a sympathetic voice as he was yawning down the stairs.

Libby H

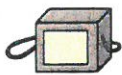

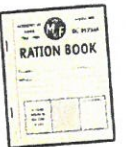

Waiting anxiously, in the hallway of their house, Jack and Mum stood tranquilly in their night clothes staring at each other.

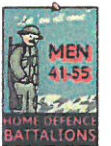

Jack started to overreact because his Granpa, who suffered from dementia, had gone missing again. Jack's happiness was lost within the air as he looked up at Mum. Determined to find Granpa, Jack quickly ditched his coat and dashed out the door like a lightning bolt. Then he hopped on his bicycle peddling as swiftly as he could down the road with Mum on the back in search for his beloved Granpa.

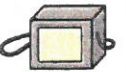

The clock tower, chimed to signal two am. Where is Granpa? Is he ok? How will they find him? Is he in peril? A shiver of ice tickled Jack's spine making him quiver, fear struck him dripping through his bones. He started to breathe heavily as he was desperate to find his Granpa...

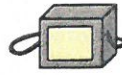

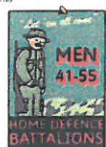

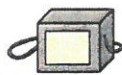

Is he ok? How will they find him? Is he in peril? A shiver of ice tickled Jack's spine making him quiver, fear struck him dripping through his bones. He started to breathe heavily as he was desperate to find his Granpa...

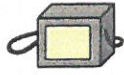

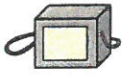

Is he ok? How will they find him? Is he in peril? A shiver of ice tickled Jack's spine making him quiver, fear struck him dripping through his bones. He started to breathe heavily as he was desperate to find his Granpa...

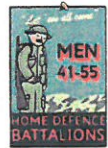

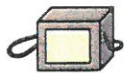

Libby H

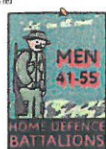

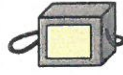

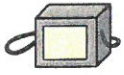

It was the absence of sound that was unnerving, the town that was once busy was now empty. The only movement was leaves, that were rustling along the pavement. Sinister shadows stood like statues casting spells of darkness. In the centre of the deserted town, all of a sudden, Dad appeared on the car park and rushed towards Mum and Jack. It was clear Dad had been crying because he had tears in his eyes. However, Dad tried to hide his face from Jack to not upset him. Dad sighed, "Any idea where my father is?"

"Let's just get this over and done with by calling the coppers," Mum suggested.
 "NO!" Jack screamed, "We will be able to find him just give me a chance," Jack pleaded. Then he grabbed Dad's hand and gestured to his parents to follow him before it was too late!

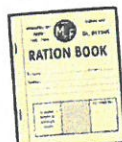

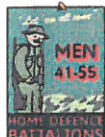

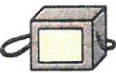

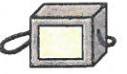

Libby H

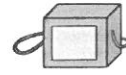

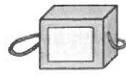

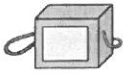

Suddenly, an idea popped into Jack's head, that he knew where Granpa was, his Granpa was at the airport. So Mum, Dad and Jack jumped into the car and raced towards the airport. Eventually, they reached the airport and hurried to where the jets were kept and saw a man ~~was~~ climbing into one. Could it possibly be Granpa? Walking towards the jet slowly, Jack looked towards the pilot and called, "Wing commander Bunting, is that you?" Jack knew he had to be cautious and the only way to coax his Granpa towards him was to enter his world. Although it was only a few seconds, to the family that were stood waiting shivering with gear in their right clothes, it felt like hours. Just at that moment, a muffled reply came, "Yes this is me Squadron leader. Over and out!" At this second, Granpa suddenly started the planes engine and headed towards the runway.

Libby H

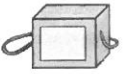

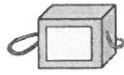

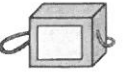

How would they stop him? Do they need help? What will they choose to do? It was getting darker and darker and darker as if a black cape was covering the whole world.

Suddenly, Granpa took off to the sky going higher and higher into the clouds and he opened the cockpit waving his hand joyfully. He stumbled out of the jet and fell through the air. Jack rushed towards him with tears in his eyes. And it seemed like darkness had turned to DEATH!

Libby H

